Challenges faced by a woman who has chosen to embrace Judaism in an Orthodox community is explored in "Woman of Valor," a new book by Huntington Woods resident Lynne Golodner.

In "Woman of Valor," Golodner tells the story of Sally Sterling, who never planned to embrace Judaism but through experiences found "the courage to love the ordinary and seek satisfaction where you are..."

Golodner will host a virtual book launch at 11 a.m. Sept. 26, which can be found here. Participants who register for the launch will qualify to win a free copy of the book and there will be giveaways from other authors at the event.

"Woman of Valor" is Golodner's first book of fiction. She has written two poetry collections and six nonfiction books.

"Having worked with small presses for the last thirty years, I wanted a different experience for my fiction," said Golodner in a press release. "I am so excited to share this compelling story with the world."

The book can be preordered at Amazon and Barnes and Noble.
